Introduction:

Networking is an integral part of any job search, but it’s also something to build and grow throughout your academic and professional life, not just during times of change. Some tips on building a network of your own:

- Join at least one professional or student organization and become an active member or leader.
- Attend conferences and events on campus and keep in touch with attendees and speakers.
- Get involved with your alumni association and Pace’s Online Community and Directory.
- Join traditional professional groups such as community and business groups.
- Periodically send or email articles of interest to your contacts with a short note.
- Invite your contacts to attend professional meetings, programs and speeches.
- Stay in touch with former co-workers and supervisors.
- Introduce your contacts to each other and let them know you are interested in meeting others in your field.
- Follow-up appropriately and express appreciation.

December 2001. Adapted from Robbie Miller Kaplan’s “20 Tips”