New name for part of Pace Law School

OCTOBER

The entrance of a new classroom building at Pace University Law School has been named the The Cuddy & Feder Grand Foyer, in appreciation for the law firm's years of support and contributions. Partners of the firm and Pace faculty unveiled the name today at a reception at the White Plains law school.

The firm, also based in White Plains, has given financial support to the law school's annual leadership award dinner, its Land Use Law Center, the Real Estate Law Institute and the Women's Justice Center. The firm also has hired many Pace Law alumni, and attorneys at the firm have volunteered for the National Environmental Law Moot Court Competition and the school's mentoring program, according to a news release.

Cuddy & Feder specializes in real estate litigation, corporate finance, lending, elder law and estate planning. Click here to learn more about the firm and click here to learn more about Pace Law School.
