The GMAT/GRE is not required for applicants with a minimum of three years of professional work experience in human resources.

Gain Specialized Skills and a Professional Edge

The MS in Strategic Global Human Resources Management equips you to lead, both within human resources and across an international organization. You learn to analyze, design, and evaluate human resources systems and processes—and to integrate localized HR practices with global business strategy. In addition to gaining domestic HR management competencies, you will acquire advanced-level global HR management competencies, including organizational behavior, labor relations, and employment law. Through an MS in Strategic Human Resources at Lubin, you gain:

- Core HR Management skills
- Global perspectives and effectiveness

Lubin's programs in human resources management have a key advantage: location, location, location. Professor Ibraiz Tarique explains how our New York City location gives students real-world experience.
