Course Focus: This course provides students an opportunity to have an interdisciplinary experience in the study of business, energy, technology, urban planning and development as well as environmental issues in Brazil. Students will visit a variety of organizations which will include for profit and not-for-profit organizations, government agencies, and entrepreneurial organizations that demonstrate sustainable business and environmental practices. During class, students will research and report on various aspects of Brazil's economy, agriculture, business, environment, politics, and future in the global economy. Students will learn about the concept of environmental responsibility through community mapping projects in the Brazilian Atlantic Rainforest and about social responsibility through education projects with young children in Rio de Janeiro, Ihla Grande and Paraty, Brazil.
