PACE UNIVERSITY RANKED MOST UNDETTATED COLLEGE IN AMERICA

Experiential Learning and Future Earning Potential
Cited as Strengths of Pace Education

Pace University has been ranked the nation’s most underrated college on Business Insider’s just-released ranking of the 50 Most Underrated Colleges in America. The report highlighted the strength of Pace’s experiential learning program and its median mid-career salary.

“Pace University offers a world-class education that combines classroom instruction with real-world experiences,” said Pace University President Stephen J. Friedman. “We have an entrepreneurial approach to our programs, and we evolve as the needs of employers change with a strong focus on outcomes. As the value proposition of higher education is debated on a national level, we are uniquely preparing our students to succeed – and as the salary data shows, it’s working.”

In determining the rankings, Business Insider considered two factors: reputation and future earnings. The survey noted that Pace students “gain hands-on experience in their fields through internships, practicums and fieldwork.” Students’ academic experiences are enhanced by the opportunity to apply classroom learning in a pre-professional work environment, leveraging the University’s strong relationships with national and local employers in business, government, healthcare, nonprofit, technology and other sectors.

The median mid-career salary of Pace students, $95,200, was another factor in determining its ranking. Through individual counseling, seminars, career development workshops, career fairs and collaborative programs with faculty, alumni and employers, Pace students gain the tools to make career decisions, connect with employment opportunities and build their future earning potential.
